

“Kumon of Manlius Embarks on a Compassionate Mission: Bridging Education and Community Service”

The team at Kumon is not only shaping young minds for academic success but also fostering a spirit of compassion and community engagement. Guided by the dedicated instructor, affectionately known as “Miss Husna,” Kumon of Manlius is embarking on a transformative service project throughout March, reflecting the institution’s core mission of molding young learners into impactful community members.

For almost 70 years, Kumon’s global reputation has rested on its commitment to “unlocking the potential of every child.” However, Kumon of Manlius is redefining success by integrating a vital aspect into its mission: community service. The team is repurposing surplus Kumon pouches into care packages for the homeless during the first week of April.

The surplus pouches, once essential for holding paper assignments, have seen reduced use with the rise of the tablet program. Rather than allowing these pouches to accumulate or disposing of them, the Kumon team saw an opportunity to make a positive impact. By transforming these colorful pouches into tangible assistance for the less fortunate, Kumon of Manlius is embodying the values of empathy and social responsibility.

This initiative seamlessly aligns with Kumon’s broader mission: developing young learners not only into academically proficient individuals but also compassionate and socially responsible citizens. The project serves as a practical lesson for children on the importance of empathy, community service, and the positive influence they can have on the world around them.

As Miss Husna affirms, “The true measure of success lies not just in academic achievement but in the positive impact we make on the lives of others. Let’s unlock not only the potential within our children but also the power to do good in the world.”
